All the talk about A law-suit being contemplated by Manag er Henry E. Abbey against Miss Mary An Ierson is in the air.

"We don't know anything about a suit beyond what we have read in the newspapers," said Mr. Abbey's business partner yesterday. "We suiter no assense. We have never had any trouble with Miss Anderson and don't anticipate any. As to her approaching marriage—well, we don't even know that she is to be married. Mind you, it may be true, but she has not even mentioned it in her correspondence. Married or not, Mr. Abbey expects her to play under his management next fail, and if anything was about to happen that might interfere with his expectation we would most likely have heard of it." "Then you have absolutely had no corroboration whatever of the news of her repagement with Mr. Navarro?".

"None at all. As I have smad, we fully expect her to come back to fair country in expect her to come hack to fair country in the fall and resume her place on the stage."

Mr. Abbey's ignorance is in striking contrast with the general understanding of a topic that has been public talk for weeks past. Still, there has been no authentic corroboration of the reported engagement. It would surprise most peopagement. It was just 12 o'clock. The 'Western Union time-ball had dropped from the big tower. There was a crush of people on Broadway—men and women, boys and girls, hurrying and scurrying in all directions. From the crowd there darted into the Western Union building a tall, wellbuilt, well-preserved old man, apparently about sixty-five years of age. His step was as springy as that of a boy of ten. It was Lilian Russell, and she led by the hand her only child, a bright-faced little girl with a weaith of golden hair surmounted with an enormous Gainsborough hat. The news of two such distinguished visitors in "the street" naturally caused a sensatum, and when the ladies reappeared a knot of brokers and office-boys were on the curbstone to do them bonor. As they passed in difkers and office-boys were on the carbstone to do them honor. As they passed in different directions they were followed by crowds until lost in the vast meistrom of Wall-street life. It was a little singular to the writer to notice that while these ladies were eagerly pursued Russell Sage, Cyrus W. "The man to whom above all others the recent Orleanist fiasco in France must possess significance is the exile of Jersey, General Boulanger," said Mr. Alexander Comstock, a well-known New York theatrical manager, yesterday. "When in Europe a few weeks ago I had an opportunity to make the acquaintance of Boulanger, and spent a whole day with him in his quiet little dormitory in Jersey. The idea of visiting him occurred to me while calling on Henri Rochefort, another noted French exile in London. The great Parisian editor lives a singular life. He is the active head of his paper, although the yeasty channel runs between him and his staff, i sat over two hours with him. He assured me that the little matter of a few miles of ocean didn't interfere with the supervision of the paper; that he wrote his leaders regularly and sent his instructions to the staff and his copy morning and evening by special messenger—wiring whatever was late and urgent for his editorial page. He could not trust the mails and did not care the later of seven and the care the later of the sections to the staff and his copy morning and evening by special messenger—wiring whatever was late and urgent for his editorial page.
